

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

SINCE the decease of the late Editor and Engraver of that portion of the following work which appeared several years since under the title of "ELVEN'S HERALDRY," the copyright and plates have become the property of the present publisher; who, from the favourable manner in which the first edition was received, has been induced to republish the volume in its present form, with the addition of upwards of One Thousand Engravings, as a work more exclusively, than any other extant, devoted to the purpose of elucidating those honourable emblems of distinction—FAMILY CRESTS; a branch of the science of Heraldry, at no period more held in interest than at the present.

The intent of the Editor and Publisher is to afford, at a very reasonable price, to the artist and the public in general, a volume which shall contain correct engravings, not only of the Crests borne by every Peer and Baronet of Great Britain, but by nearly every distinguished family in the kingdom; accompanied by a few historical remarks, a list of terms, and copious indexes of the bearers' names*; and forming, altogether, an interesting and useful companion to the "Introduction to the Study of Heraldry," by the late Hugh Clark, a work long and deservedly favoured with a large share of public approbation, and which, with this volume, will be found of essential service to the amateur, the artist, and the historian.

The Publisher will be glad to avail himself of any information for the improvement of the volume, and will be happy to insert in future editions all family crests forwarded to him free of expense.

* To give the name of every person and family each crest is at present borne by, would increase the volume to too great an extent, many having assumed crests, which they have no reasonable right to bear, and many families of the same name, and originally of the same descent, (though, in the lapse of time, now considered as of different families), bearing the same emblem, and others of the same descent, with either the addition or deduction of a letter in the name, bearing the same crest. In proof of which, in a volume of crests lately published by Messrs. Knight and Rumley, (which, for style of drawing, beauty and delicacy of engraving, is unrivalled), about 350 examples are introduced, for which an index of upwards of 3000 families is given. In the same ratio, the 3500 crests contained in this volume would require an index of 30,000 families.

HERALDRY OF CRESTS.

A CREST, which derives its appellation from crista, the comb of a cock, denotes, in heraldry and armour, the uppermost part of an armorial bearing, or that part which rises over the casque or helmet, next to the mantle. In heraldry only, the crest is a figure placed upon a wreath, coronet, or cap of maintenance, above both helmet and shield; as, for instance, the crest of a bishop is the mitre. The right to assume these distinguishing emblems was originally deemed one of the principal marks of nobility; which may be inferred from their having been borne at tournaments, to which none were admitted unless they had given strong proof of magnanimity, courage, or merit, or possessed the advantage of superior birth. Hence also the crest is esteemed a criterion of higher nobility than the armour generally.

The ancient warriors wore crests, to strike terror in their enemies, as the representations of animals they had killed; or to give them a more formidable mien, by making them appear taller and more martial. Hence the term crest-fallen is often used, figuratively, to express a want of spirit or courage. Sometimes the crest has served to distinguish sovereigns and commanders in the field; at others, to mark the several branches of a family; and, on some occasions, as the distinguishing badge of factions.

Philip Earl of Flanders is supposed to have been the first who introduced into this country the use of crests upon seals, &c., about the year 1101. The great seal of Richard I., who died A.D. 1199, was represented with a plume of feathers as a crest. After that reign, most of the English kings had crowns on their helmets. Richard II., previous to 1377, had a lion upon a cap of state. Edward III. was the first king of England that bore a crest upon his helmet in the field. After the institution of the Order of the Garter, the knights companions followed the same example, which soon became general among the nobility, and was afterwards assumed by all who were legally entitled to bear arms; since which time it has been considered by the College of Arms as a necessary appendage in the emblazoning of coat-armours.

This honourable emblem of distinction differs from any other part of an armorial bearing, being either attached to the arms or borne separately; some with mottoes, and others without, at the option of the bearer. It is represented by any beast, bird, serpent, or fish; by trees, flowers, fruit; castles, globes, spheres; swords, corslets, armour, spears, arrows, or other emblems, issuing out of a coronet, cap, or wreath. From the immense increase of persons entitled to bear arms, it was found necessary to vary the figures by additional marks of distinction; such as charges, or various beasts, &c. holding implements of war, laurels, escalops, anchors, swords, spears, flags, birds, and other figures of every description and of interminable variety, emblematic of either the name or actions of the assumer.

CROWNS, CORONETS, WREATHS, AND HELMETS*.

THE CROWN of the KING of GREAT BRITAIN is a circle of gold, enriched with pearls and precious stones, and heightened up with four crosses pattée, and four fleurs-de-lis alternately: from these rise four arch-diadems, adorned with pearls, which close under a mound ensigned by a cross pattée.

The CORONET of the PRINCE of WALES has a mound and cross, as the royal diadem, but with only one arch.

For YOUNGER SONS and BROTHERS of the BLOOD ROYAL the Coronet differs from the last, in having neither mound nor arch.

Those of the NEPHEWS of the BLOOD ROYAL differ from the last, by having strawberry-leaves on the rim, instead of fleurs-de-lis.

Those of the PRINCESS ROYAL and YOUNGER SISTERS have strawberry-leaves, crosses pattées, and fleurs-de-lis.

A DUKE's differs from all the former, by having strawberry-leaves only, which are represented with five leaves on the rim.

* For more replete information upon this head, and for correct engravings, the reader is referred to Clark's Introduction.

A MARQUIS'S differs from that of a duke, by having leaves and pearls intermixed, alternately, of equal height: it is represented with three leaves and two pearls.

An EARL'S has the pearls fixed upon spikes much higher than the leaves: it is represented with five pearls.

A VISCOUNT'S has pearls set close to each other on the rim: it is represented with seven or nine pearls.

A BARON'S has only four larger pearls close on the rim.

AN EASTERN CROWN is of gold, and was formerly worn by Jewish kings.

A NAVAL CROWN is of gold, adorned with heads and sterns of galleys of ancient times: it was usually bestowed on him that first boarded an enemy's ship. Plate 58, No. 1.

A MURAL CROWN is of gold, adorned with battlements, and was given by the Romans to him who first mounted an enemy's breach; whence its designation; muralis signifying, in Latin, "relating to a wall." Plate 58, No. 2.

A TRIUMPHAL CROWN, or garland made of laurel, was worn by the first Roman emperors in token of victory, with the sanction of the senate of Rome.

The idea, as some affirm, was taken from Apollo's crowning his head with laurel.

A CIVIC CROWN was anciently made of oaken leaves, with acorns, and was given by the Romans to any brave soldier who had saved the life of a fellow-citizen.

AN OBSIDIONAL CROWN was given by the Romans to him who relieved a besieged city or town. It was composed of green leaves, or of grass or herbs gathered on the spot where the enemy had been overthrown or forced to flight. The great Quintus Fabius received this crown for defending and delivering Rome from the siege of Hannibal.

A CAP OF MAINTENANCE, or DIGNITY, by the French called a chapeau, was worn by all the nobility, taking its name of maintenance from a cap which Pope Julius the Second sent, with a sword, to King Henry the Eighth, for his writing a book against Martin Luther, and, of course, in maintenance of the faith. Plate 1, No. 1.

HELMETS.

HELMETS are generally used by gentlemen, from the esquire to the king, and are borne upon the shield, and thereon the crest; see Plate 102. They have been borne two or three upon one shield. If there be three, the middle one is seen in front, the other two facing each other.

The full-faced helmet is represented with bars, all of gold damasked for sovereigns, and Princes of the blood. See Plate 102.

The full-faced helmet with five bars (the helmet of steel, and bars and breast-plate gold), for dukes and marquesses. Plate 102.

A profile helmet of steel, with bars, &c. of gold, for earls, viscounts, and barons. Plate 102.

A full-faced helmet of steel, with the visor open, for baronets and knights. Plate 102.

A profile helmet of steel, the visor shut, for an esquire. Plate 102.

WREATH, AN ATTIRE FOR THE HEAD.

THE WREATH is composed of two bands of silk interwoven; one band tintured of the principal metal, and the other of the principal colour in the arms: but if there be not any metal in the coat of arms, then the band must be of the two principal colours. These, when formed into a wreath, are placed between the helmet and crest.

The crest must always be on a wreath, when it is not placed on a cap, or within a coronet.

Wreaths, on which crests are placed, should be composed of six folds, three of metal and three of colour, beginning with the metal first. A wreath placed on a man's head should have two bows or strings at the sinister end. King Edward III. of England wore it of pearl and gold.

DESCRIPTION OF BEASTS, BIRDS, &c.

MADE USE OF AS

THE KING'S CREST. The king's crest is an imperial crown, a lion passant-gardant, crowned. A lion's figure is a striking, well-proportioned model of strength, differing from the rhinoceros or overgrown elephant; his look bold, his gait proud, his voice terrible, his face broad, his mouth larger than any animal of its kind, surrounded with a mane. He has a majestic appearance; and is, for his heroic qualities, used as an emblem of strength, courage, generosity, power, and royalty, and termed the king of beasts. Plate 1.

Three lions passant were first borne on the royal arms of England in the reign of King Richard the First.

The lion is more generally used on crests than any other beast.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S CREST originated with Edward the Black Prince, at the battle of Cressy, Aug. 26, 1346, who, leading the vanguard, slew John of Luxemburg, King of Bohemia, and deplumed his casque or helmet of ostrich feathers; to which he added the motto "Ich dien," (I serve), within a coronet of cross pattées and fleurs-de-lis, which have been borne by the Prince of Wales, heir apparent to the crown of England, ever since. Plate 83.

THE TIGER. Next to the lion is the tiger, an animal not possessed of the good qualities of the lion; being fierce without provocation, and cruel without cause. The chief difference of the tiger from every other animal of the mottled kind is in the shape of the spots on the skin, which run in streaks or bands in the direction of the ribs. The leopard, panther, and the ounce, are all, in a certain degree, marked like this animal, except that the lines are broken by round spots, which cover the whole surface of the skin. The use of the tiger in heraldry is extensive. Plate 10.

THE RHINOCEROS is a native of Africa: his hide is of such a texture, that it will even turn the edge of a sword. He is said frequently to whet his horn against a flint, that he may be ready to defend himself against his enemies. From these qualities, his bulk and strength, we may infer his use in heraldry. Plate 22.

THE WILD BOAR. In countries where these animals abound, the hunting of them by dogs trained up for the sport constitutes the chief amusement of the great. When the boar is fatigued, the hunters approach, and he soon falls a victim to their darts and spears. It is one of the principals in heraldry, and may be properly applied as the armorial bearing of a warrior. Plate 18, No. 3.

THE ELEPHANT is a beast of huge strength, very sagacious, and in height from ten to fifteen feet. The largest are kept for the use of princes and monarchs in the East. He is said to live one or two hundred years. This animal seems capable of affection and gratitude. In carrying of burdens he is equal to five or six horses, and can support three or four thousand pounds' weight on his back. The elephant is much used in armorial bearings, and may be considered an appropriate crest for those who have distinguished themselves in feats of arms in the East. Plate 19.

THE BEAR. There are three distinct kinds of this animal; the black bear, the North American bear, and white bear: they are principally found in cold climates. The bear of the Alps is savage in its nature, and takes up its abode in mountainous precipices: at the beginning of winter it sleeps for several weeks, without any supply of food. It is much used in armory. Plate 16, No. 30.

THE WOLF. King Edgar is said to be the first that attempted to rid England of these animals; criminals even being pardoned by producing a stated number of these creatures' tongues. Some centuries after, they increased to such a degree as to become again the object of royal attention; and Edward the First appointed persons to extirpate this obnoxious race. It is one of the principal bearings in armory. Hugh, surnamed Lupus, the first Earl of Kent, bore for his crest a wolf's head. Plate 13, No. 5.

THE CAMELOPARD is only found in the deserts of Africa. It is singular in shape, has two round horns, and bears resemblance to the camel and deer: its form is slender, and measures between seven and eight feet in height; the hind legs are near a foot and a half shorter than the front; the hair is of a deep brown, beautifully marked with spots of white. It is fond of retirement, and may therefore be deemed an emblem of solitude. This is only in few instances made use of in heraldry. Plate 33, No. 3.

THE CAMEL. The Arabians consider this animal a most sacred treasure, without whose help life could not be endured: its milk supplies them with nourishment; its flesh with food; its hair, which is regularly shed once a year, provides them with clothing; its strength enables them to transport their merchandise. They are accustomed, when young, to have their legs bent under them to receive their burdens. When they travel through the dreary plain, parched by excessive heat, they will eat the driest food: and the stomach having a reservoir to contain a quantity of water, it will go several days without a fresh supply. They are tractable and useful, and easily become subservient. Plate 20, No. 23.

THE IBEX is a native of the Alps, the Pyrenees, and the Grecian mountains, where they abound in defiance of their hunters: it resembles a goat, but the horns are much larger, bent backwards, and full of knots, one of which is added every year. Plate 22, No. 21.

THE GOAT is calculated for a life of liberty more than confinement: its delight is in climbing high rocks and precipices; and as it undertakes the most dangerous enterprises, may appropriately be applied in armory. Plate 21.

THE BUFFALO inhabits many parts of India, and is very fierce: it is with some difficulty that travellers escape its pursuit, and many are gored to death. This and the bull are much used in armory. Plate 27.

THE HOLY LAMB is described with a staff and banner, with a glory over the head, as an emblem of faith: this, with the ram and lamb, are all used in armory. The lamb may be properly applied as an emblem of virtue and innocence. Plate 21.

THE HARE, RABBIT, AND SQUIRREL, in many particulars resemble each other. From the timidity of these animals, they can only be applied in heraldry to those who require peace and solitude. Plate 21.

THE OTTER. This amphibious animal is peculiar in catching fish: its use in heraldry may be well applied to those whose pursuits are in the north part of America. Plate 34, No. 15.

THE BEAVER has a peculiarly soft downy skin, which is used for garments. The industry and perseverance of this animal may have originated its use in armory. Plate 21, No. 25.

DEER. These peaceable, harmless creatures would probably be adopted in heraldry, were it only for the extreme elegance of their appearance. Plate 38.

THE STAG is one of those innocent, peaceable animals, calculated to embellish the forest, and for the amusement of man. In the reign of William Rufus and Henry the First, the life of the stag was thought so estimable, that the same criminality was attached to their destruction, as one of the human race. This beast is possessed of two excellent qualities: the one, exceeding quickness of hearing, for which reason it is an emblem of one of the five senses; the other, for swiftness, by which it may avoid danger. Hence it became one of the principals in armorial bearings. Plates 37 to 41.

THE HORSE. The horse is one of the most beautiful and useful animals of the creation: of all beasts he is the most noble and beneficial to man in peace or war; being eminent in battle, fleet, proud, spirited, and strong. The Arabian treats his horse as he would his friend; neither whip nor spur is ever used but in time of need. The qualities of this animal fully account for its adoption as one of the principal bearings in heraldry. Plate 43.

THE PEGASUS, a winged horse, is represented as the emblem of swiftness, and is frequently used by the heralds in that sense: in various other cases it is much made use of in heraldry. Plate 44, No. 35.

THE CENTAUR is an imaginary creature, representing half a man and half a horse. Historians relate that the first man seen on horseback was taken for that monster, which so terrified the enemy that they took flight: it is the representation of one of the twelve celestial figures of the zodiac; and was borne by King Stephen of England, in consequence of his entering this kingdom and gaining a victory when the sun was in that sign. Its use in armory is generally applied to those who are eminent in the field. Plate 45, Nos. 9 and 10.

THE UNICORN is generally supposed to be a fictitious animal, representing the body of the horse, the tail of a lion, and the hoofs of a stag, with a twisted horn that grows from the front of the head. There is a fish called a unicorn or narwhale, which probably gave rise to the history of the unicorn, which Pliny has described as resembling a horse with a horn fixed in the front of the head. Historians relate, that this beast was famous for virtue and strength, and that his horn was supposed to be the most powerful antidote against poison. It implies the virtue of the mind and strength of the body, and is much made use of in heraldry. Plate 41, No. 10.

THE ASS, from the ill treatment it meets with, and from the slavery it endures, may be properly termed the representation of patience. Our blessed Saviour, being of patience and humility, rode on the ass to show his patience by suffering for us. Its use in armory is well applied for pious, good, and virtuous men. Plate 41, No. 18.

THE GRIFFIN. This chimerical creature is half an eagle and half a lion: it is said when he attains his full growth he will never be taken alive; hence he is a lively representation of a valiant hero, who, rather than yield to his enemy, exposes himself to the worst of dangers. It is one of the principal bearings in heraldry. Plate 26.

THE CAT is considered, though so domesticated, as possessed of ingratitude; in its friendship so uncertain, and so vicious in its nature, that it is only calculated for destroying the obnoxious race of rats. In heraldry it should be represented front face. Plate 15, No. 11 to 15.

THE DRAGON and WYVERN, imaginary monsters, are represented as strong and fierce animals, and may be deemed the emblems of viciousness and envy. In armory they are properly applied to tyranny, or the overthrow of a vicious enemy. Plates 23 and 24.

THE HYDRA, a fabulous creature, is represented to be a dragon with seven heads. Only in two or three instances, it is borne as an armorial bearing. Plate 23, No. 30.

A HERALDIC TIGER. This imaginary creature was composed by the heralds in ancient times, and is represented in its body similar to a wolf; with a spike at the end of the nose, a knotted mane, and a lion's tail. Plate 22, No. 2, &c.

THE REINDEER is principally found in Lapland and Russia, resembles the stag, and is much used in travelling: its horns are large, having two smaller ones, or antlers, growing from the forehead. Plate 41, No. 31.

THE GREYHOUND. It would be unnecessary to name the qualities of this animal; they are intended to denote swiftness, vigilance, and fidelity. The talbot, the spaniel, the hound, are all used in heraldry. Plates 12, 13. 32. 37.

THE FOX, so famous for his cunning, to avoid his pursuers, secures himself in the earth: in the time of distress he contrives to make a kennel at the edge of a wood, yet as near as possible to a neighbouring cottage, that he may hear the crowing of the cock, and the cackling of the hens, to which he is an inveterate foe. Its application in heraldry would denote superior sagacity or wisdom. Plate 30, No. 22.

THE HEDGEHOG, which sleeps through the winter season, and remains a long time without food, may be considered the emblem of frugality; but it is not so much used in heraldry as many other emblems. Plate 34, No. 11.

THE COCKATRICE. This monster, partaking of the fowl in its wings, and serpent in its tail, is of that nature that its look or breath is said to be deadly poison. It was much used in armory among t ancients, as being terrific to their enemies. Plate 24, No. 30.

AN EAGLE DISPLAYED, WITH TWO HEADS. Historians state, that the day Alexander the Great was born there sat upon the house of his father two eagles. After that time it was adopted as the armorial ensign of Russia and Germany, to denote a double empire of Europe and Asia : it is represented as one eagle with two heads (termed a spread eagle), supposed to look two different ways, the east and the west. Plate 66, No. 30.

THE EAGLE. As the lion is represented as the king of beasts, so is the eagle deemed a king among birds. It is said that the female exposes her young ones against the beams of the sun, and such of them as cannot look at the brightness are cast out. Plate 67, No. 30.

William Rufus, King of England, gave for a device an eagle looking against the sun. From this we may infer its use in heraldry.

In the first ages of the French monarchy, the emblematic distinction between the nobleman and the vassal was, that the former always carried a hawk upon his head : afterwards the eagle became the emblem of hereditary greatness ; but this noble bird was claimed by the military heroes, as better adapted to designate the glories of the field than the repose of an unagitated career.

THE PHOENIX, an imaginary bird, is represented to be as large as the eagle : it is said there is never but one existing at one time, which, according to fabulous writers, lives 500 years; and when her end approaches, she makes a nest, which taking fire by the heat of the sun, she is destroyed, and out of the ashes arises another phoenix. It was often used by the ancients as figurative of the resurrection. It is much used in heraldry, and borne by many families in the united kingdom. Plate 67, No. 24.

THE FALCON was first introduced into heraldry in Germany, as the principal amusement of our ancestors. In falconry, a man of rank was rarely seen out without his hawk: so much it was considered a mark of distinction, that the nobleman was frequently drawn with his favourite hawk upon his hand. A falcon proper is represented with a bell tied to each leg. Plate 68, No. 17.

THE HAWK'S BELL is also of great antiquity, being worn by the Hebrew high-priests, on the skirts of their upper garments, in divine worship. Plate 93, No. 11.

THE LURE, with a line and ring; an instrument used by falconers to deceive their hawks, by casting it up in the air like a fowl they were to pursue. Plate 88, No. 17.

THE PELICAN, feeding her young, is represented as an emblem of our Saviour, and adorned the altars of many churches of the Egyptians. It is one of the ancient bearings in heraldry. Plate 69, No. 30.

THE SWAN is principally calculated for pleasure-grounds and gardens belonging to great personages, which are intersected by rivers or canals.

There is not a more beautiful figure in all nature than a swan gliding along the stream, "with arched neck between its wings mantling;" and to this its use in heraldry is most probably to be attributed. These birds were in such esteem in the reign of Edward the Fourth, that he made it imprisonment to touch their eggs; and no one was suffered to keep them unless his annual income amounted to five marks. Plate 70, No. 30.

THE OSTRICH. This gigantic creature, which is the largest bird in the creation, is often represented holding a horse-shoe or key, or any article made of iron: it has a voracious appetite, and its stomach will digest the hardest substances. From its extraordinary stature, striking peculiarities, and valuable plumes, this bird is much used in heraldry. Plate 72, No. 10.

THE RAVEN was the ensign of the Danes when they invaded England. The Romans also held the raven in high estimation. It is said to live much longer than the human species, having been known to live one hundred years. The rook and crow are equalled it used in armory. Plate 80, No. 7.

THE CORNISH CHOUGH is much used in armory, and may be termed the king of crows. Excepting the beak and legs, which are of a reddish yellow, it is as black as a raven, but of a very different disposition, for, instead of injuring others, it seems to act as a sentinel to the whole feathered creation. Its use is very properly applied in heraldry. Plate 71, No. 13.

THE OWL, the favourite bird of Minerva, was borne by the Athenians as their armorial ensign : possessing the advantage of seeing in the dark, it intimates that true wisdom never sleeps, and is the emblem of prudence, vigilance, and watchfulness. Plate 72.

THE MARTLET was borne by those who went to the Holy Land to fight against the Turks and Saracens: it is what we now call the martinet, a bird of passage, frequently to be seen under the cornices of houses, from whence, by the support of the wings, it is able to take flight. Should it pitch upon the level, from the wings being long and legs short, it would not be able to rise. It is an appropriate mark of distinction for young sons, suggesting to them the means of gaining wealth and honour. It is used in armory in all parts of Europe. Plate 70, No. 25.

THE COCK is esteemed for his unrestrained courage and perseverance. When victor, he crows in testimony of conquest. He is brave and vigilant, and rather than yield to his adversary, frequently fights until he drops dead. Being the herald of the day, and the sentinel of the night, he may be properly termed the emblem of watchfulness and wisdom. Its use in armory is well applied to heroes in the field, as well as able men in the senate. Plate 75.

THE PEACOCK. When this bird appears with his tail expanded, he struts about with majestic ostentation. In form completely elegant, with its feathers diversified by brilliant tints and shades, it is principally kept at gentlemen's country-seats for beauty and ornament. The first of this species was brought from the East Indies, and it is borne in heraldry by many distinguished families. The beauty of the bird, no doubt, suggested its adoption as an armorial emblem. Plate 73, No. 30.

THE PHEASANT was originally brought into Europe from the banks of Phocis, a river in Asia, from whence it takes its name. Next to the peacock, this is the most beautiful of birds. It is said when Croesus, King of Lydia, was seated on his throne, adorned with royal magnificence, he asked Solon, if he ever beheld any thing so fine and beautiful. The Greek philosopher, nowise moved by the pomp and pageantry around him, replied, that after having seen the beautiful plumage of the pheasant, no other finery would astonish his sight. Plate 71, No. 21.

THE DOVE or TURTLE-DOVE, whose eye is of a yellow tint, surrounded with a circle of bright crimson, has, for ages past, been the theme of poets: it is noted for its kind disposition and chastity. Where it lives a single life, after the death of its mate, its attachment is such, that if a pair are put into a cage, and one dies, the other soon pines away with grief. Having been the bird which God selected out of Noah's ark as a messenger, to which it returned with an olive-branch in its mouth to denote that the waters had abated upon the earth, it is very generally used as a crest. Plate 71.

THE SPHINX. A statue much esteemed among the Egyptians, representing a chimerical beast, with the face and breast of a woman, and in the body like a lion. This emblem is borne by the English regiments engaged in that enterprise, in which, after encountering the tedious difficulties of landing in the face of the French army, in the bay of Aboukir, they covered themselves with glory at the battle of Alexandria, in Egypt, on the 8th of March, 1801, and where, in the moment of victory, their brave general, Sir Ralph Abercrombie, was mortally wounded. Plate 35, No. 30.

HARPY. This fabulous monster is a bird with a virgin's face, neck, and breast, and the body of a vulture, a lion, or a dragon; from whence we may infer its use in armory. Plate 35, Nos. 1. 3. 5. 7.

THE COLOSSUS was a statue of an enormous gigantic size. The most eminent of this kind was the colossus of Rhodes, one of the wonders of the world, a brazen statue of Apollo, so high that ships passed in full sail betwixt its legs. It was the workmanship of Chares, a disciple of Lysippus, who spent twelve years in making it: it was at length overturned by an earthquake, after having stood eighty-five years. Its height was 105 feet; there were few people could fathom its thumb. Some critics are of opinion that the colossus of Rhodes gave its name to the people amongst whom it stood. Hence they suppose that the Colossians in Scripture, to whom St. Paul wrote his epistle, are in reality the inhabitants of Rhodes. When the Saracens became possessed of the island, A. D. 672, the statue was found prostrate on the ground: they sold it to a Jew, who loaded 900 camels with brass, 720,000 lbs. weight. There is only one crest of this description, by the name of Rodd. Plate 50, No. 30.

THE MONKEY. This animal, so nearly resembling the human species, is so well known as to require no description of its cunning, sagacity, arts, and tricks. It is but seldom used in armory. Plate 33, No. 30.

THE BAT resembles, in some measure, both bird and beast; it is doubted which it partakes most of: her wings, flying, resemble the bird, and her body the mouse. She brings forth her young, and suckles them with her teats. There are only a few families that bear this emblem. Plate 34, No. 10.

THE SALAMANDER was described by the ancients as bred by fire and existing in flames; an element which must inevitably prove the destruction of life. This fabulous assertion gave rise to its use in heraldry. Plate 33, No. 2.

THE CATHARINE-WHEEL derives its name from the circumstance of the virgin St. Catharine's limbs being torn to pieces by its iron teeth. This punishment, in the primitive age of the church, was frequently endured, even by children, for the profession of their faith; which brought its use into armory. Plate 93, No. 15.

GALLS, or CHEVAL-TRAPS, were small sharp iron instruments, thrown by the ancients in the way of horses, to wound their feet, and so contrived that one point was always upwards. Plate 91, No. 25.

THE BATTLE or POLE-AXE, made to cut and thrust at once, was much used by the ancients. Plate 89, No. 3.

PHEON signifies the iron head of an arrow. Plate 91, No. 29.

PORTCULLIS. This instrument, which is plated with iron, and pointed at bottom, is placed over the entrances of castles and citadels, to be let down or drawn up at pleasure. In heraldry it is considered as an emblem of valour. Plate 92, No. 9.

SCALING-LADDERS, composed of ropes, &c. are used by soldiers to ascend the walls of towns and fortified places. Plate 97, No. 1.

BATTERING-RAM. This instrument, a long beam, having at one end an iron head of the shape of a ram's, from whence it takes its name, was hung by chains, and swung backwards and forwards by several men, in beating down the walls of towns, cities, and fortified places, until they made a breach therein. This is of very ancient date, and was made use of.

before canuon was invented. But few bearings of this kind are found in armory. Plate 94, No. 35.

BEACONS. Great stacks of wood were used as beacons until the 11th year of the reign of King Edward the Third, when he ordered pitch-pans to be placed on the tops of places built for the purpose, which were set on fire upon the invasion of an enemy, and alarmed the whole country. They were called beacons, from the Saxon becnian, to beckon, or call together. At that time every county in England had one. Plate 89, No. 30.

THE BUGLEHORN was formerly used principally by those who attended tournaments: hence it is, from its antiquity, much used in heraldry. Plate 88, No. 19.

THE RING is well known as the emblem of fidelity. In ancient times it was greatly valued, and Joseph was highly honoured by one given him by Pharaoh. The Romans wore it in token of knighthood, and it is still used at coronations and other ceremonies. Plate 86, No. 29.

THE CHESS-ROOK is used in the game of chess, which was devised in the year of Christ 614, and took its name from standing on the utmost corner of the board, as a frontier castle for the defence of the rest. Plate 88, No. 18.

THE TORTOISE is a long-lived animal, and cannot be destroyed without some difficulty. It has been known to live a hundred and twenty years, and its shell is invulnerable to every attack of the most formidable foe. This may imply its proper use in armory. Plate 36, No. 15.

THE DOLPHIN is styled the king of fish : its figure is erroneously described in being represented curved. This error is supposed to proceed from the observation of mariners when the dolphin leaps out of the water : it is by them considered ominous, as antecedent to a storm. Plate 36, No. 30.

THE ESCALOP-SHELL, attached to hoods and hats, was the pilgrims' ensign in their expeditions to holy places ; and became such distinguishing insignia, that Pope Alexander IV. allowed it to none but to pilgrims who were truly noble : but being afterwards put into the collar of the order of St. Michael, it was introduced also into armory. Plate 36, No. 20.

THE SNAIL. Though the snail moveth along slowly, she ascendeth the highest places by indefatigable perseverance and caution, and may be deemed the emblem of deliberation, investigation, and perseverance. Plate 36, No. 21.

THE ROSE. The red rose was the ancient bearing of the house of Lancaster, as was the white rose of the house of York : they were adopted by John of Lancaster, and Edward his brother, in 1385 ; and in 1486, the two houses being united by King Henry the Seventh, the male heir of the house of Lancaster, marrying Elizabeth, the eldest daughter and heiress to King Edward IV., of the house of York, the two roses then became united into one. The rose, thistle, and shamrock, are now blended, as the principal bearings of our gracious sovereign King George the Fourth. Plate 100, No. 31.

The rose represents the emblem of England.	} See Frontis- piece.
The thistle, the emblem of Scotland.
The shamrock, the emblem of Ireland.

THE THISTLE is a prickly weed, and grows wild in Scotland and all mountainous countries. It was introduced in the year 1706 in the royal arms of England. Plate 100, No. 33.

THE TREFOIL, or SHAMROCK, a three-leaved grass, peculiar to Ireland; was introduced in the year 1801. The rose, the thistle, and the shamrock are blended with each other on one stem, in honour of the union of the three countries. Plate 84, No. 9.

FLEUR-DE-LIS. This flower is supposed to be a kind of lily; but it differs much from the lily of the garden, in having only three leaves. Louis the First, King of France, adopted three fleurs-de-lis for his arms, on account of its sounding like his name. Plate 100, No. 29.

THE LILY. This beautiful flower is properly represented as the emblem of purity. In the year 1400, Ferdinand of Arragon instituted an order of knighthood under its name.

LAUREL. The Romans used to make their garlands of triumph of the leaves of this plant. Plate 93, No. 3.

WHEAT-STALK. This and other kinds of corn are usually bound up in sheaves, called by the heralds garbs, which figuratively represent plenty. Plate 96, No. 36 to 40.

THE OAK is said to represent antiquity, strength, and long life. Plate 84, No. 30.

THE OLIVE is emblematical of peace, concord, and obedience. Plate 100, No. 4.

THE PALM is the emblem of victory and justice, as the cypress and pine are deemed the emblems of death and oblivion: when once lopped or cut off, they will never sprout again. Plate 93, No. 2.

OSTRICH FEATHERS. A plume of feathers, argent, was borne by King Stephen of England, with the motto, "No force alters their fashion;" alluding to the fall of the feather, which cannot be shaken into disorder by the wind. Plate 83.

BEEES are the emblem of industry; they indicate that a man by industry may arrive at the greatest eminence. Plate 100, No. 12.

FIRE, in heraldry, is an emblem of ardent courage and perseverance. Plate 102, No. 5.

OF THE

CRESTS, WITH THE FAMILY NAMES, &c.

N.B. Baronets are known by the letter B.

Those names, which have the number of the crest, as well as the number of the plate, bear the same crests as those on the plates to which the number refers. For instance, Allen, No. 5. Plate 27. has the crest of Tempest.

This mark † denotes that the same name occurs more than once on the Plate.
